Ultra F/Photodisc/Getty Images For some schools it is important that students wear school uniforms to maintain the calm of the infection. School uniforms are common in religious schools, and private schools and some public schools need them. According to a 2005 study, researchers found that Ohio schools that recently implemented uniform policies saw an increase in attendance, as did the total number of graduates for the 2005 school year, yet there were cases of fewer suspensions in schools that wanted students to wear uniforms or follow strict dress codes. They look more united, which creates a sense of community and toughness while reducing the sense of competition. Powerful and costly students who wear uniforms go to school spend less time preparing in the morning than students who wear uniforms. They don't need to spend time thinking about what to wear or having to try several different outfits. This helps some students sleep more, since they can wake up later in the morning knowing they don't have to spend a lot of time dressing up. They are also more likely to have a nutritious breakfast before school, which gives them the energy they need to focus more on the class. School uniforms can also reduce clothing costs for parents. Students who attend school without a uniform policy may be more concerned about wearing stylish or expensive clothing. Parents of students attending schools with uniform policies spend up to $150 less on clothing each year, as noted by the National Retail Federation. School uniforms, bullying and violence help to get rid of bullying due to the fact that everyone is dressed alike and children can not be joking for wearing something unusual or different. Uniforms can create an environment of equality, since students from different economic backgrounds wear the same clothes, which can reduce the bullying of those who may not be able to afford stylish or expensive clothes. School uniforms allow school intruders to identify easily, which is especially important in the world of school photography. Similarly, if a student is abducted or leaves school at an unauthorized time, they will be more easily identified to the authorities if they wear a school uniform. Arguing with a school uniform, some argue with students who have Wear uniforms because it contradicts their right to expression. They believe that students should be able to show their personality and creativity by dressing the way they want. Some parents also feel they have to pay for the uniform conflict, having the right to send their children to public schools for free. They feel that uniforms impose additional costs that they should not happen to keep their children educated for free. They argue school uniforms actually create bigger goals for bullying as students from other schools easily single out students in uniform. Some students may feel dissatisfied with their school, allowing them to wear uniforms, which can cause behavioral problems not to be in schools where uniforms are not required. Children lose a piece of their personality by having to dress like everyone else. School uniforms make children give up their identities. Clothes help individuals show their own unique parts. Uniforms do not allow them to show what they like or who they are. In addition, the uniform is not cheap. If the child's parents can't afford it more than a couple, they will need to do continuous laundry. Most uniforms must be rolled and hung up to avoid wrinkles. This increases unnecessary stress to parents. When you are ready to send your child back to school, it may be good to suspend shopping for school clothes. Kids may want to see fashion this year. Maybe you can save money on shopping back to school by foreclosed. However, shopping for school uniforms is a different story. The fashion of the year never changes, but the closer you get to the beginning of school, the more expensive and more difficult uniform shopping becomes. Many schools have strict uniform policies that identify certain suppliers, and if you wait for them to run out of sizes, you'll do two trips to the uniform store or pay for urgent delivery! However, not all schools care where the school uniform comes from, as long as it fits the guidelines. And that's a good thing because shopping outside the official uniform shop is often cheaper. In the last twenty years, school uniforms have become big business. In the 2019 study, the National Center for Educational Statistics found that during the 2015-2016 academic year, About 21% of public schools in the United States want uniforms that same year, annual school uniform sales (including parochial, private, and public schools) totaling about $1 billion in school uniforms can range from official to informal. Some schools that perform them choose what they often think about connecting with private or parochial schools: nice pants and white shirts for boys, jumpers and white shirts for girls. However, most public schools turn to something more casual and acceptable to parents. Students: khaki or jeans and knitwear of different colors. The latter seem to be too affordable because they can be used outside of school. Many school districts that operate uniforms provide some financial assistance for families who can't afford the extra costs. Military uniforms and uniforms of both students are equally necessary for the country. ⇒ Amit Kalantri, (author) A wealth of some rational terms offered to support school uniforms are as follows: gang color protection, etc. in schools, reducing violence and theft due to clothing and shoes, discipline among students, the need for administrators and teachers to be 'police clothes' (for example, considering that shorts are too short. Instilling the feeling of community/helping schools recognizing those who are not on campus, the argument for school uniforms hinges on its performance in practice. Historical data from school administrators who implement uniform policies point to the fact that they have a positive effect on discipline and schools. Please note that all of the following are from high school. In 1999, officials found that criminal incidents at the district's schools dropped by 86%, test scores and grades increased and lack of failure and discipline issues decreased. However, administrators point out that uniforms are just one of many reforms that are being made, along with downsizing classes, core courses and standardized teaching. More recently, a 2012 study found that after years of uniform policy at high schools in Nevada, school police data showed that 63% fell in a police report in Seattle, Washington, where mandatory policies against opt-out, school administrators saw a decline in truants and tardies. A sense of seriousness about work. Whether these results are directly linked to school uniforms is hard to say. However, it can be said that there have been some changes to the authorities noticing. We can't reduce school uniform coincidences with these changes either. If you need more information about schools that implement uniform policies, please refer to the Ministry of Education's manual on school uniforms [in school uniforms]. These schools don't do enough damage, make these kids think the same, now do they have to make them look the same too? - George Carlin, a comedian, some arguments made with uniforms include: Students and parents argue that uniforms violate freedom of expression. Some students may choose to express themselves individually in other ways, such as physical penetration. Hard to control. Parents raise concerns about the cost, as uniforms separate students from one school, this can lead to problems with students from other schools. Families fear that it could interfere with religious clothing, such as yarmulkes, a new policy for school uniforms can be time-consuming and difficult to enforce. There are concerns that uniforms are often associated with setting up schools in low-income cities. The National Academy of Education Statistics states that in 2013-14: A higher percentage of schools where 76 percent or more students are eligible for free or reduced lunches are required for school uniforms, rather than schools with a lower percentage of students eligible for free or reduced-price lunches. Other concerns have been raised by David L. Brunsma, a professor of sociology at the University of Missouri-Columbia. He analyzed data from schools across the country and published research with co-author Kerry Ann Rockquemore that concluded that 10th grade public school students who wore uniforms did not better than those who did not participate in behavioral or drug use, the effectiveness of uniforms would be the subject of ongoing research as more and more schools looked for social and economic solutions of joining bullying discipline. And while school uniforms may be only a small part of the solution for all these illnesses, they do one important solution, to abuse the dress code. As principal Rudolph Saunders explained to Education Week (1/12/2005) before the school uniform. I will spend 60 to 90 minutes a day in violation of the dress code. Of course, there are always those students who will try to change their uniforms for individuality. Skirts can be rolled up, pants can be lowered below the waist and (inappropriate?). The text on the T-shirt can still be read through a button-up shirt. In short, there is no guarantee that students wearing school uniforms will always meet the dress standards. In Tinker v. Des Moines School of Independent Communities (1969), the court said that the freedom of expression of students in schools must be protected unless it seriously interferes with the appropriate disciplinary requirements. In an offensive comment written by Justice Hugo Black, he said that if the time comes when students of state-funded schools can violate the orders of school officials to keep their minds in their own class work, it is the beginning of a new era of forgiveness in this country promoted by the judiciary. Students remain protected under Tinker, however, with an increase in school violence and gang-related activities, the political climate appears to be turning to more conservatives, and the Supreme Court has begun to return many decisions back to the discretion of the local school board. The problem of the school uniform itself, however, has not been dealt with by the Supreme. Schools must educate students in a safe environment. Over time, education often falls off as the school's main focus. As we have seen, unfortunately, school safety is a big problem, it's hard to think of a policy that truly works without turning schools into concentration camps. After the mass shooting at Columbia High School in 1999, where students were partly excluded for what they were wearing, and after the theft and mass murder over shoes, designers became clear why many schools in the district wanted uniformed institutions. It may help bring back the sense of finishing and allow teachers to do what they are hired to do: teach. However, they still have to comply with state and federal anti-discrimination laws when they make their police. Here are some ideas to make using uniforms easier to accept by students and parents: make uniforms more casual - jeans and knitwear, students outlet for their own expression: buttons to support political candidates, but not gangs associated with paraphernaliaProvide, financial assistance to parents who can't afford uniforms. This is required by the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, making your program voluntary if community pressure is too large. This does not include this, it may lead the court to decide on your application unless there is evidence that fewer measures are ineffective.
